her·e·sy (hĕr′–) noun [·sies pl.] 1 A doctrinal view or belief at variance with the recognized tenets of a system, church, school, or party. 2 [Obs.] Any course of conduct or instruction tending to produce dissension and schism in the church. [<Gr. hairesis, a choosing, <haireō, take] her·e·tic (hĕr′–) noun 1 One who holds a heresy. 2 An actual or former member of a church, or one whose allegiance is claimed by it, who holds religious opinions contrary to the fundamental doctrines and tenets of that church. —he·ret·i·cal adj. — ·cal·ly adv. [<Gr. hairetikos, able to choose, <haireō, choose]

Synonyms: dissenter, heresiarch, non-conformist, schismatic. Etymologically, a heretic is one who takes or chooses his own belief, instead of the belief of his church; a schismatic is primarily one who produces a split or rent in the church. A heretic differs in doctrine from the religious body with which he is connected; a schismatic differs in doctrine or practice, or in both. A heretic may be reticent, or even silent; a schismatic introduces divisions. A heresiarch is the author of a heresy or the leader of a heretical party, and is thus at once a heretic and a schismatic. With advancing ideas of religious liberty, the odious sense once attached to these words is largely modified, and heretic is often used playfully. Dissenter and non-conformist are terms specifically applied to English subjects who hold themselves aloof from the Church of England.

—noun [·LIES pl.] 1 A holy thing or quality. 2 [Obs.] A sanctuary. 3 [Obs.] A saint. 4 pl. [Obs.] Sacred rites. [<OE. halig]

Synonyms (adj.): blessed, consecrated, devoted, devout, divine, hallowed, sacred, saintly. Sacred is applied to that which is to be regarded as inviolable on any account, and so is not restricted to divine things; therefore in its lower applications it is less than holy. That which is sacred may be made so by institution, decree, or association; that which is holy is so by its own nature, possessing intrinsic moral purity, and, in the highest sense, absolute moral perfection. God is holy; his commands are sacred. Holy may be applied also to that which is hallowed; as, "the place whereon thou standest is holy ground," Ex. iii, 5. In such use holy is more than sacred, as if the very qualities of a spiritual or divine presence were imparted to the place or object. Divine has been used with great looseness, as applying to anything eminent or admirable, in the line either of goodness or of mere power, as to eloquence, music, etc., but there is a tendency to restrict the word to its higher sense, as designating that which belongs to or is worthy of the Divine Being. See PERFECT, PURE. Antonyms: abominable, common, cursed, impure, polluted, secular, unconsecrated, unhallowed, unholy, unsanctified, wicked, worldly.

Hy'·a·des (-deez) 1 In Greek legend, the daughters of Atlas and guardians of Dionysus, changed into stars, whose rising with the sun betokened the rainy season. 2 A cluster of stars in Taurus, including Aldebaran, shaped like the letter V. Also Hy·ads. [<Gr. hyein, to rain] hy·æ'·na Same as hyena.

hyal·, hyalo· Combining forms from Greek hyalos, glass, used to denote glassiness.

hy·a·line (-lin or -line) noun 1 A glassy surface, as of the sea; something transparent. 2 A nitrogenous compound, related to chitin, the chief constituent of hydatid cysts, which on decomposition yields a reducing sugar. 3 One of a class of similar substances which give carbohydrates as cleavage products. Also (2 & 3) hy·a·lin.

—adj. Consisting of or resembling glass; transparent; as, the hyaline substance of a cell. [<L. hyalinus <Gr. <hyalos, glass] hyaline cartilage That form of cartilage in which the cells are embedded in a homogeneous translucent matrix.

hy'·a·lite noun A pellucid glassy variety of opal, of no commercial value.

hy·al·o·gen (-jĕn) noun Any of various insoluble substances found in animal tissues and related to mucin; it yields hyaline on hydrolysis.

hy·a·loid adj. Like glass; pellucid; as, the hyaloid artery [<Gr. hyalos, glass, + -oid] hyaloid membrane A delicate membrane enveloping the vitreous humor of the eye.

hy'·a·lo·plasm (-plazm) noun The fluid or semifluid, clear ground-substance of protoplasm, as distinguished from the granular substance. Also hy·a·lo·plas'·ma (-plăz'·muh). [<Gr. hyalos, glass, + -plasm] —hy·a·lo·plas'·mic (-plăz'·mic) adj.

Hy·bla (hee'·blub) The name of several ancient towns in Sicily, especially Hybla Major, famed for its honey Hy·blæ·an (-blee'·un) adj. Of or relating to Hybla, hence, smoothly flowing. Also Hy·ble·an.

hy·brid (hī'–) adj. 1 Produced by interbreeding or cross-fertilization. 2 Derived from incongruous sources; mixed. —noun 1 An animal or plant of mixed parentage, a heterozygote. 2 Anything of heterogeneous origin or incongruous parts. [<L. hybrida, mongrel] hy·brid·ism noun 1 The state of being hybrid: also hy·brid·i·ty. 2 The act of interbreeding, or of inducing hybridization. 3 The mingling in one word of elements from more than one language.

hy'·brid·ize verb [·ized, ·iz·ing] 1 To produce or cause to produce hybrids. 2 To combine in a hybrid manner, be capable of cross-breeding. Also [Br.] hy'·brid·ise. —hy·brid·i·za'·tion noun —hy'·brid·iz·er noun —hy·brid·ous adj.

hy·dan·to·in noun A white crystalline derivative of allantoin, $C_3H_4ON_2$. [<Gr. hydōr, hydatos, water, + (alli)antoin]

hy'·da·thode noun An epidermal cellular structure, as a gland, that exudes water, found in plants. [<Gr. hydor, water, + hodos, way] hy'·da·tid noun 1 An encysted vesicle containing an aqueous fluid. 2 An encysted larval stage of a tapeworm. —adj. Of or pertaining to a water-containing cyst. [<Gr. hydatis, drop of water]

hy·da·to·gen'·e·sis noun Formation of water, as in the tissues and cavities of the body. [<Gr. hydor, hydatos, water, + genesis]

Hyde, Douglas, born 1860, Irish Gaelic scholar; president of Ireland, 1938–45.

Hyde, Mr. See Jekyll.

Hy·der·a·bad' (-bad' or bahd') 1 A native state, the most populous and second largest in India, located in the Deccan and ruled by a Nizam; hence, often called Nizam's Dominions; area, 82,698 square miles; capital, Hyderabad. 2 A city in central Hyderabad State. 3 A city in Sind Province, NW India, on the Indus River.

Hy·der·a·li (ah'·lee or ah·lee'), 1728–82, regent of Mysore who fought against the British; father of Tipu Sahib. Also spelled Haidar Ali.

hyd·no·car'·pate noun A salt or ester of hydnocarpic acid, especially the sodium salt or ethyl ester, used in the treatment of leprosy.

hy·d·no·car'·pic adj. Denoting an acid, $C_{16}H_{28}O_2$, extracted from the seeds and oil of the chaulmoogra tree, and used in the treatment of leprosy. [<Gr. hydnon, truffle, + karpos, fruit]

hydr- A combining form from Greek hydōr, water, denoting wateriness, or, in chemistry, the presence of water

hy·dra noun [hy·dras or hy·drae (-dree) pl.] 1 Any evil having many forms. 2 A fresh-water polyp (genus Hydra). [<Gr. hydra, water serpent]

Hy·dra 1 In Greek legend, the nine-headed water serpent of Lerna, which could grow two heads as fast as one was cut off, slain by Heracles who prevented their regrowth with a firebrand. See under Heracles. 2 A southern constellation. See constellation.

hy·drac·id (-drăs'·id) noun An acid that contains no oxygen, as hydrochloric acid (HCl); contrasted with oxyacid.

hy'·dra·gog noun Any medicine that causes abundant watery evacuations. Also hy'·dra·gogue.

hydra-headed adj. Having many heads; hard to destroy.

hy·dran·ge·a (-drān'– or -drān'·jī·uh) noun A plant of a genus (Hydrangea) of trees and shrubs of the saxifrage family, with opposite, usually serrate, leaves and cymose clusters of perfect flowers. [<Gr. hydōr, water, + angeion, vessel]

hy·drant (-drunt) noun A valved discharge pipe connected with a water main; a plug. [<Gr. hydōr, water]

hy·dranth (-dranth) noun A nutritive zooid in a hydroid colony, or the part with the mouth and digestive cavity. [<hydra + Gr. anthos, flower] hy·drar·gyr'·ic (-jĭr'·ic) adj. Of, pertaining to, or containing mercury.

hy·drar·gy·rism (-jī·rĭzm) noun Mercury poisoning; mercurialism.

hy·drar·gy·rum noun Mercury: especially so called in pharmacy. [<I.L. <Gr. hydrargyros <hydōr, water, + argyros, silver] hy·dras·tine (-teen) noun A bitter, crystalline alkaloid, $C_{21}H_{21}NO_6$, contained in the roots of goldenseal (Hydrastis canadensis), having tonic and febrifuge properties.

HY·DRATE noun A compound formed by the union of molecules of water with other molecules or atoms. — tr. verb [HY·DRAT·ED, HY·DRAT·ING] To combine with water or its elements to form a hydrate. [<Gr. hydōr, water] — HY·DRAT·ED adj. — HY·DRA·TION noun.

HY DRAU·LIC adj. 1 Pertaining to hydraulics, involving the moving of water, or force exerted by water; as, hydraulic engineering, mining, etc. 2 Denoting any of various machines and structures operating by means of water or other liquid under pressure; as, a hydraulic elevator, crane, ram, press, etc. 3 Hardening under water; as, hydraulic cement. Also HY·DRAU·LI·CAL. [<Gr. hydōr, water, + aulos, pipe] — HY DRAU·LI CAL LY adv.

HYDRAULIC RAM

a Air–chamber. d Check–valve.
b Body. e Clack–valve.
c Air–inlet. f Supply pipe.
g Delivery pipe.

HYDRAULIC RAM An automatic device by which the fall of a comparatively large quantity of water furnishes the power to raise a smaller quantity to a height above that of the source.

HY DRAU LICS noun 1 The science of liquids, especially water, in motion. 2 Hydraulic engineering.

HY DRA ZINE (–zeen) noun 1 A colorless fuming–liquid base, N_2H_4, derived from diazoacetic acid, used as a reducing agent in organic synthesis. 2 One of a group of compounds derived from the foregoing by replacement of one or more hydrogen atoms by another radical, as, phenyl hydrazine.

HY DRA ZO' IC adj. Of or pertaining to a colorless, very toxic acid, HN_3, obtained from hydrazine by various methods, its salts, HYDRAZOATES, explode with great violence when heated.

HY DRIC adj. Of or pertaining to hydrogen in combination.

HY DRIDE (–drīde) noun 1 A compound of hydrogen with another element or radical acting as an element. 2 A hydroxide. Also HY DRID.

HY DRI OD' IC adj. Pertaining to or designating a dense, colorless, suffocating gas, HYDRIODIC ACID, HI, soluble in water, formed by the union of hydrogen and iodine.

HYDRO A combining form from Greek hydor, water, meaning water, as in *hydro*gen, or meaning hydrogen, as in *hydro*chloric acid.

HY DRO AIR' PLANE Same as HYDROPLANE 1.

HY DRO BRO' MIC adj. Designating a colorless, pungent liquid, HYDROBROMIC ACID, HBr, formed by the union of hydrogen and bromine.

HY DRO CAR' BON noun One of a large and important group of compounds that contain hydrogen and carbon only. There are many types and classes, including the aliphatic, aromatic, saturated, and unsaturated hydrocarbons.

HY' DRO CELE (–seel) noun A localized accumulation of fluid surrounding the testicles. [< HYDRO– + –CELE]

HY DRO CEPH' A·LUS noun An accumulation of watery fluid within the ventricles or between the membranes of the brain. [< HYDRO– + Gr. kephalē, head] — HY·DRO·CEPH' A·LOID, HY DRO·CEPH' A LOUS adj.

HY DRO CHLO'·RIC (–klō'·rik) adj. Pertaining to or designating a colorless, corrosive, fuming compound, HYDROCHLORIC ACID, HCl, exceedingly soluble in water, in which form it is largely used in manufactures and sometimes called muriatic acid.

HY DRO CHLO'·RIDE (–klō'·rīde) noun A compound produced by the union of hydrochloric acid with an element or radical.

HY DRO CY·AN'·IC adj. Of, pertaining to, or designating an unstable, volatile, colorless, and extremely poisonous liquid compound, HYDROCYANIC ACID, HCN, formed by decomposing metallic cyanides with hydrochloric acid. It is only slightly dissociated in water, and has a characteristic odor resembling that of bitter almonds: also called prussic acid.

HY DRO DY·NAM'·IC adj. Of or pertaining to the force or pressure of water or other fluids. Also HY·DRO·DY·NAM'·I CAL.

HY DRO·DY·NAM'·ICS noun The branch of mechanics that treats of the dynamics of fluids.

HY DRO E LEC'·TRIC adj. Of or pertaining to electricity developed by water power, or by the escape of steam under high pressure, etc. — HY·DRO·E·LEC·TRI'·CI·TY noun.

HY·DRO FLU·OR'·IC adj. Pertaining to or designating a volatile, colorless, hygroscopic, corrosive, liquid compound, HYDROFLUORIC ACID, HF or H_2F_2, formed by decomposing metallic fluorides. It readily attacks silica, hence is used for etching on glass.

HY'·DRO·GEL (–jēl) noun A colloid which has assumed a jellylike form in the presence of water.

HY·DRO·GEN noun The lightest of the elements (symbol H) occurring chiefly in combination with oxygen as water, and in hydrocarbons and other organic compounds. When isolated it is usually a colorless, odorless, tasteless, inflammable gas, 0.07 lighter than air and liquefying under great pressure and low temperature. — HEAVY HYDROGEN See DEUTERIUM. [<HYDRO– + –GEN] — HY·DROG·E·NOUS adj.

HY'·DRO·GEN·ATE tr. verb [·AT·ED, ·AT·ING] 1 To cause to combine with hydrogen. 2 To expose to hydrogen, or to effect chemical action of by the use of or by exposure to hydrogen; as, to hydrogenate fats and oils. Also HY'·DRO·GEN·IZE.

HY·DRO·GEN·A'·TION noun The act or process of subjecting to the action of hydrogen, usually in the presence of a catalyst; as, the hydrogenation of coal to form liquid hydrocarbons.

HYDROGEN CYANIDE Hydrocyanic acid.

HYDROGEN ION The positively charged hydrogen ion (H^+) present in all acids. The number of hydrogen ions per unit volume of an aqueous solution is known as the HYDROGEN ION CONCENTRATION, or pH value, a measure of relative acidity, with pH 7 taken as neutral.

HYDROGEN PEROXIDE A syrupy liquid, H_2O_2, whose aqueous solutions are important as antiseptics and bleaching agents, the usual solution being a slightly acid one containing about 3 percent by weight of pure hydrogen peroxide. Also HYDROGEN DIOXIDE: also called peroxide.

HYDROGEN SULFIDE A colorless, gaseous compound, H_2S, having a characteristic odor of rotten eggs, made by decomposing certain metallic sulfides, chiefly iron, by means of acids. It is poisonous and is a valuable laboratory reagent.

HY'·DRO·GLID·ER noun A glider with floats attached to permit the landing on or taking–off from water.

HYDROGRAPHIC OFFICE A bureau of the U. S. Navy Department in charge of the charting of navigable waters and the studying of oceanography.

HY·DROG RA·PHY noun The science of determining and making known the conditions of navigable waters, charting rivers, coasts, etc. — HY·DROG·RA·PHER noun — HY·DRO·GRAPH'·IC, ·I·CAL adj.

HY·DROID adj. 1 Of or pertaining to a class (Hydrozoa) of mostly marine cœlenterates resembling the hydra; polyplike. 2 Designating a reproductive phase in the development of certain hydrozoans characterized by the formation of colonies. — noun A hydrozoan.

HY DRO·KI·NET'·IC adj. Relating to the motion of fluids and the energy involved in their motion. Also HY·DRO KI·NET'·I CAL.

HY·DRO·KI·NET'·ICS noun The science of fluids in motion; also, hydrodynamics.

HY·DROL·O·GY noun The branch of physical geography that treats of the waters of the earth, their distribution, characteristics, and effects. [<HYDRO– + –LOGY] — HY DRO·LOG'·IC, ·I·CAL adj. — HY·DRO·LOG'·I·CAL·LY adv. — HY·DROL·O·GIST noun.

HY DROL·Y SIS noun Any chemical decomposition involving the addition of water; specifically, a double decomposition reaction between water and some other compound, as phosphorus trichloride. [< HYDRO– + –LYSIS] — HY DRO·LYT'·IC adj.

HY' DRO·LYTE noun Any substance affected by hydrolysis.

HY'·DRO·LYZE tr. verb [·LYZED, ·LYZ ING] To cause to undergo the process of hydrolysis. — HY' DRO·LYZ·A·BLE adj. — HY·DRO·LY·ZA'·TION noun.

HY'·DRO·MAN·CY noun Divination by means of water. — HY'·DRO MANC·ER noun — HY·DRO·MAN'·TIC adj.

HY·DRO ME·CHAN'·ICS noun The mechanics of fluids, including hydrostatics, hydrodynamics, hydrokinetics, and pneumatics. — HY·DRO·ME·CHAN'·I·CAL adj.

HY·DRO·ME DU'·SA (–dū'·suh) noun A type of cœlenterate produced by budding from an individual, as the jellyfish and medusa.

HY'·DRO·MEL noun A liquor, usually unfermented, consisting of honey diluted with water; when fermented, it is called mead. [<L. <Gr. hydōr, water, + meli, honey]

HY·DRO MET'·AL·LUR·GY noun The process of assaying or reducing ore by means of liquid reagents. — HY·DRO·MET·AL·LUR'·GI·CAL adj.

HY·DRO·ME'·TE·OR noun A watery or aqueous meteor; in the plural, all the meteorological effects produced by water, as rain, snow, hail, etc.

HY DRO·ME·TE·OR·OL'·O·GY noun The branch of meteorology that treats of hydrometeors or of water in the atmosphere.

HY·DROM·E·TER noun 1 An instrument for determining the density or specific gravity, especially of liquids and solutions: also called densimeter. 2 A current gage. — HY·DRO·MET'·RIC, ·RI·CAL adj. — HY·DROM·E·TRY noun.

HY·DROP·A·THY noun The treatment of diseases by the use of water; water cure. — HY·DRO·PATH'·IC, ·I·CAL adj. — HY·DROP·A·THIST, HY'·DRO·PATH noun.

HY'·DRO·PHANE noun A whitish or light–colored opal, opaque when dry, but translucent when wet. [<HYDRO– + Gr. phainō, seem, appear] — HY·DROPH·A·NOUS adj.

HY·DROPH·I·LOUS (hī·drŏf′·ĭ·lus) adj. Having the flowers pollinated by the agency of water: said of certain higher plants.

HY·DRO·PHO′ BI·A noun 1 A disease communicated by the bite of a rabid animal, due to a specific virus in the saliva, characterized by great disturbance of the central nervous system, difficulty of swallowing (formerly thought to be dread of water), and spasmodic muscular contractions; rabies. 2 Any morbid dread of water. [<Gr. hydrophobia <hydōr, water, + phobos, fear] —HY·DRO·PHO′ BIC adj.

HY′·DRO PHONE noun 1 An electrical instrument for detecting underwater sounds, especially of enemy submarines. 2 A device used for the purpose of detecting leaks in water pipes. [<HYDRO– + Gr. phōnē, sound]

HY′·DRO PHYTE noun A plant living in water or in wet ground. —HY·DRO·PHYT′·IC adj.

HY DROP IC adj. Dropsical; affected with dropsy. Also HY·DROP·I·CAL. —HY·DROP·I·CAL·LY adv.

HY′·DRO PLANE noun 1 An airplane so constructed as to be capable of alighting or traveling upon, traveling over, or rising from the water: also called hydroairplane. 2 A motorboat of extremely light construction driven either by submerged screws or by aerial propellers.
—intr. verb [·PLANED, ·PLAN·ING] To move on water at a speed sufficient to give support through hydrodynamic and aerodynamic forces alone.

HY DRO·PON′·ICS noun Soil-less agriculture; the raising of plants in nutrient mineral solutions without earth around the roots: also called water culture. [<HYDRO– + Gr. ponos, labor] —HY DRO·PON′ IC adj.

HY′·DROP·SY noun Dropsy. Also HY·DROPS, HY·DROP·SI·A.

HY DRO·QUI·NONE′ (–kwi·nōne′) noun A white crystalline compound, $C_6H_4(OH)_2$, derived variously. In medicine it is used as an antiseptic and antipyretic, and in photography as a developing agent. Also HY DRO·QUI NOL′ (–kwi·nōle′).

HY′·DRO·SCOPE noun 1 An instrument for detecting moisture, especially in the air. 2 An instrument for seeing through considerable depths of water. —HY DRO·SCOP′·IC or ·I CAL adj.

HY′·DRO SERE noun In plant succession, the series of changes in vegetation which take place in the water.

HY·POC·RI SY (hĭ·pŏc′·rĭ·sĭ) noun [·SIES pl.] The feigning to be what one is not; extreme insincerity; dissimulation. [<Gr. hypokrisis <hypo, under, + krinomai, contend]

Synonyms: affectation, cant, dissimulation, formalism, pharisaism, pietism, pretense, sanctimoniousness, sanctimony, sham. Pretense (L. prætendo) primarily signifies the holding something forward as having certain rights or claims, whether truly or falsely; in the good sense, it is now rarely used except with a negative; as, there can be no pretense that this is due; a false pretense implies the possibility of a true pretense; but, alone and unlimited, pretense commonly signifies the offering of something for what it is not. Hypocrisy is the false pretense of moral excellence, either as a cover for actual wrong, or for the sake of the credit and advantage attaching to virtue. Cant (L. cantus, a song), primarily the sing-song iteration of the language of any party, school, or sect, denotes the mechanical and pretentious use of religious phraseology, without corresponding feeling or character; sanctimoniousness is the assumption of a saintly manner without a saintly character. Affectation is in matters of intellect, taste, etc., much what hypocrisy is in morals and religion; affectation might be termed petty hypocrisy. Compare DECEPTION. Antonyms: candor, frankness, genuineness, honesty.

ingenuousness, openness, sincerity, transparency, truth, truthfulness.

HYP·O·CRITE (–crĭt) noun One who acts a false part or makes false professions. [<Gr. hypokritēs, one who plays a part on the stage] — HYP·O·CRIT′·I·CAL adj. — HYP·O·CRIT′·I·CAL·LY adv.

Synonyms: cheat, deceiver, dissembler, impostor, pretender. A hypocrite is one who acts a false part, or assumes a character other than the real. The deceiver seeks to give false impressions of any matter where he has an end to gain; the dissembler or hypocrite seeks to give false impressions in regard to himself. The dissembler is content if he can keep some base conduct or evil purpose from being discovered; the hypocrite seeks not merely to cover his vices, but to gain credit for virtue. The cheat and impostor endeavor to make something out of those whom they may deceive. The cheat is the inferior and more mercenary, as the thimble-rig gambler; the impostor may aspire to a fortune or a throne. Compare HYPOCRISY.

I

I, I [EYES, I's, Is pl.] 1 The ninth letter of the English alphabet: from Phenician yod, Greek iota, Roman I. 2 Any sound of the letter i. In English it has four different pronunciations of varying value. Long i (in both accented and unaccented syllables) is pronounced as in ice, climate, dime, microbe, piety, idea, biography. Thus is also the sound in choir, height, pie, etc. Short i (in both accented and unaccented syllables) is pronounced as in it, idiom, pill, window, habit, magic, mikado, misconstrue, etc. It becomes obscured in unstressed open syllables in some words like animal, divide, possible, vanity, etc.; and is often lost entirely before l or n, as in agile, cavil, devil, futile, basin, Latin, raisin, etc., with certain exceptions in -ile and -ine, as crocodile, juvenile, reconcile, canine, calcine, feline, etc.

I before r, when stressed and followed by a consonant, is pronounced like the u in burn, as in bird, dirge, firm, mirth, thirst, but when unstressed it has the value of the e before r in writer, as in Virginia, tapir, triumvir, circumference. At the end of a diphthong i has the sound of y, as in oil, boil, cloister, void, etc. The consonant i has the value of y in yes, and is pronounced like y in words like dahlia, junior, familiar, onion, etc. See ALPHABET, TYPOGRAPHY.

-IC suffix Of, pertaining to, like, consisting of, etc. (that which is indicated in the root), as artist*ic*, quixot*ic*, volcan*ic*, etc. Some words ending in -ic are both adjectives and nouns; as, public (this termination was formerly written -ik, -ike, or -ick). Adjectives with the termination -ikos, common in Greek, soon came to be used as nouns, either in the singular or in the neuter plural form -ika, to express affairs or matters pertaining to some department of life or knowledge. When adopted into the Romance languages these neuter plurals (through the Latin -ica) were used as singular nouns, and through this channel the English language has the forms arithmet*ic*, logic, magic, mus*ic*, etc. After the 16th century it became customary to use the plural form -ics in names of sciences; thus, optics, statics, metaphysics, etc. A few adjectives in -ic form adverbs in -icly, as publ*icly*, but the adverb is usually from the secondary form -ical. See -ICS, -ICAL. In chemistry -ic is used in the names of compounds, to denote a higher valence of the element from which the compound is named than is expressed by the suffix -ous; as, nitr*ic* acid (HNO_3), nitr*ous* acid (HNO_2). [<L. -icus, or Gr. -ikos]

I·DE·A noun 1 Any notion or thought; as, the idea of a horse or of happiness. 2 The result of thinking; a definitely formulated thought; an opinion; as, a clear idea of social justice. 3 A plan or project; as, to have an idea of going into business. 4 A concept; a mental representation of something perceived through the senses. 5 A vague thought or fancy; supposition; as, I had no idea you'd come. 6 [Pop.] Meaning; aim; as, what's the idea? 7 In Platonic philosophy, the archetype or external pattern of which all existing things are imperfect representations. 8 [Obs.] The embodiment of a conception. [<L. <Gr. idein, to see]

Synonyms: apprehension, archetype, belief, conceit, concept, conception, design, fancy, fantasy, ideal, image, imagination, impression, judgment, model, notion, opinion, pattern, plan, purpose, sentiment, supposition, theory, thought. Idea is in Greek a form or an image. The sense implied by early Platonic philosophy has nearly disappeared and has been largely appropriated by ideal, but something of the original meaning still appears when in theological or philosophical language we speak of the ideas of God. The present popular use of idea makes it signify any product of mental apprehension or activity, considered as an object of knowledge or thought; this coincides with the primitive sense at but a single point—that an idea is mental as oposed to anything substantial or physical; thus, almost any mental product, as a belief, conception, design, opinion, etc., may now be called an idea. Compare FANCY, IDEAL, IMAGE, THOUGHT. Antonyms: actuality, fact, reality, substance.

I·DE·AL (ī·dē'·ul) adj. 1 Pertaining to or existing in ideas; conceptional. 2 Of or pertaining to an ideal or perfection. 3 Conceived as perfect, supremely excellent, or very desirable. 4 Existing only in imagination or notion; of such perfection as to be practically unattainable. 5 In philosophy, existing as an archetypal idea or pattern.

—noun 1 That which is taken as a standard of excellence or beauty; an ultimate object of attainment; model; type. 2 That which exists only in imagination. [<L. idealis]

Synonyms (adj.): fancied, fanciful, imaginary, unreal, visionary. Compare IMAGINARY, ROMANTIC. See also PERFECT. Antonyms: actual, material, palpable, physical, real, substantial, tangible, visible.

Synonyms (noun): archetype, idea, model, original, pattern, prototype, standard. An ideal is that which is conceived or taken as the highest type of excellence or ultimate object of attainment. The archetype is the primal form, actual or imaginary, according to which any existing thing is constructed; the prototype has or has had actual existence; in the derived sense, as in metrology, a prototype may not be the original form, but one having equal authority with that as a standard. An ideal may be primal, or may be slowly developed even from failures and by negations; an ideal is meant to be perfect, the best conceivable thing that could by possibility be attained. The artist's ideal is his own mental image, of which his finished work is but an imperfect expression. The original is the first specimen, good or bad; the original of a master is superior to all copies. The standard may be below the ideal. The ideal is ordinarily unattainable; the standard is concrete, and ordinarily attainable, being a measure to which all else of its kind must conform; as, the standard of weights and measures, of corn, or of cotton. The idea of virtue is the mental concept or image of virtue in general; the ideal of virtue is the mental concept or image of virtue in its highest conceivable perfection. Compare EXAMPLE, IDEA. Antonyms: accomplishment, achievement, act, action, attainment, development, doing, embodiment, execution, fact, incarnation, performance, practice, reality, realization.

I·DE·AL·ISM (ī·dē'-) noun 1 Any of several philosophical theories that there is no reality, no world of objects or "thing-in-itself" apart from a reacting mind or consciousness; that only the mental is knowable, and therefore that reality is essentially spiritual or mental: variously developed by Berkeley, Kant, Hegel. 2 In literature, the development of subject-matter following an imaginative or preconceived idea of perfection instead of adhering strictly to facts: opposed to realism. 3 The quest of the ideal; the habit of forming ideals and of striving after their realization; by extension, that which is so realized; the attainment of an ideal. 4 In art, the endeavor to attain perfection by improving and uniting in one form all the best qualities to be found in different individual forms. Idealism creates in conformity with a preconceived ideal; realism restricts the imaginative faculty.

I·DE·AL·IST (ī·dē'-) noun 1 One who idealizes, or seeks an ideal or ideal conditions; a visionary; a romantic. 2 An exponent of idealism in art or literature. 3 One who holds the doctrines of any philosophic idealism. —I·DE·AL·IS'·TIC adj. —I·DE·AL·IS'·TI·CAL adj. —I·DE·AL·IS'·TI·CAL·LY adv.

I·DE·A'·TION noun The mental power to form ideas; also, the mental process of forming and using ideas. —I·DE·A'·TION·AL adj.

I·DEM noun & adj. The same: abbreviated id. [<L.]

I·DEN·TI·CAL (ī·den'-) adj. 1 Absolutely the same, the very same. 2 Uniform with something else in quality, condition, execution, appearance, etc. [<LL. identicus <L. idem, the same] —·LY adv. —·NESS noun.

Synonyms: alike, equivalent, interchangeable, same, self-same. Strictly, no two person or things can be identical or the same. In looser usage, two volumes may be said to be identical or the same in contents; a carbon copy is identical in substance with the original, but is not the same document. Two synonyms, as "begin" and "commence," may be in most cases equivalent and interchangeable, but one is not the same as the other, and at some point they will be found to draw apart, either in meaning or use. A check may be equivalent to the money specified, but it is not the same as cash. When a person or thing is surely recognized as the very one referred to, and no other, we say, "This is the identical man, the identical document," or "the same man, document." See SYNONYMOUS. Antonyms: contrary, different, dissimilar, distinct, diverse, other, separate, unlike.

An idiom or idiomatic phrase cannot be deduced from its grammatical structure or its component parts: as, to bring about (accomplish); to come by (obtain); to put up with (tolerate, endure), etc. Idiomatic phrases should be carefully distinguished from figurative phrases, in which the words have their ordinary grammatical relations but are used figuratively; as, to break the ice; to carry coals to Newcastle; to set a trap for; to stand in one's own light. 2 A speech or jargon peculiar to a certain group; a language or dialect used by a special class; as, the Gipsy idiom. 3 The peculiar genius or spirit of a language. 4 Specific character; peculiarity. See synonyms under LANGUAGE. [<Gr. idiōma <idios, one's own]

IM·MERGE (i·mûrj′) verb [·MERGED, ·MERG·ING] 1 To immerse. 2 To disappear, as a star in the sun's light. [<L. in, in, + mergo, dip] —IM·MER·GENCE noun.

IM·MERSE (i·mûrs′) tr. verb [IM·MERSED, IM·MERS·ING] 1 To dip into entirely, as into water. 2 To involve deeply; engross. 3 To baptize by immersion. [<L. immersus <in, in, + mergo, dip]

Synonyms: bury, dip, douse, duck, immerge, plunge, sink, submerge. Dip is Saxon, while immerse is Latin for the ...lar and com-

...sion in many cases. To speak of ... dipping now seems rude, but was entirely proper and usual in early English. Baptists now universally use the word immerse. To dip and to immerse alike signify to bury or submerge some object in a liquid; but dip implies that the object dipped is at once removed from the liquid. Immerse suggests more absolute completeness of the action; one may dip his sleeve or dip a sponge in a liquid, if he but touches the edge; if he immerses it, he completely sinks it under, and covers it with the liquid. Submerge implies that the object cannot readily be removed, if at all; as, a submerged wreck. To plunge is to immerse suddenly and violently, for which douse and duck are colloquial terms. Dip is used, also, unlike the other words, to denote the putting of a hollow vessel into a liquid in order to remove a portion of it; in this sense we say dip up, dip out. Compare synonyms for DBURY.

IM·MER·SION (i·mûr′·shun) noun 1 The act of immersing or the state of being immersed; specifically, baptism by submersion in water. 2 The state of being overwhelmed or deeply engaged; absorption; as immersion in business. 3 The disappearance of a heavenly body, either by passing behind another or by entering into the light of the sun or the shadow of the earth.

IM·MI·NENT adj. 1 About to happen; impending: said especially of danger or evil. 2 Overhanging as if about to fall. —·LY adv.

Synonyms: impending, threatening. Imminent, from the Latin, with the sense of projecting over, signifies liable to happen at once, as some calamity, dangerous and close at hand. Impending, also from the Latin, with the sense of hanging over, is closely akin to imminent, but somewhat less emphatic. Imminent is more immediate, impending more remote, threatening more contingent. An impending evil is almost sure to happen at some uncertain time, near or remote; an imminent peril is one liable to befall very speedily; a threatening peril may be near or remote, but always with hope that it may be averted. Antonyms: chimerical, contingent, doubtful, improbable, problematical, unexpected, unlikely.

IN DUC TEE' noun One inducted into military service.

IN DUC TION noun 1 The process of inducing or bringing in a conclusion or an event by some particular path or course of reasoning. 2 The process of inferring or aiming at the general from observation of the particular; specifically, the inference of a specific law of causational connection from the observation and analysis of some particular instance or instances. 3 Any conclusion reached by inductive reasoning. 4 In English ecclesiastical law, the formal installation of a person into an office or church living. 5 An introduction; especially, a preamble, prolog, or prelude foreshadowing the argument or character of a literary work. 6 The bringing forward of separate facts as evidence in order to prove a general statement. 7 The production of magnetization or electrification in a body by the mere proximity of magnetized or electrified bodies, or of an electric current in a conductor by the variation of the magnetic field in its vicinity. 8 Admission, as of motive fluid, into the working cylinder of an engine. 9 The act or process of inducting, as for military service; initiation; installation. 10 [Obs.] A beginning or introduction to anything; that which leads to or induces a thing. —MAGNETIC INDUCTION The magnetization of iron, steel, etc., by its introduction into a magnetic field [<F. <L. in, in, + duco, lead] —IN·DUC·TION AL adj.

Synonyms: deduction, inference. Deduction is reasoning from the general to the particular; induction is reasoning from the particular to the general. In deduction, if the general rule is true, and the special case falls under the rule, the conclusion is certain; induction can ordinarily give no more than a probable conclusion, because we can never be sure that we have collated all instances. An induction is of the nature of an inference, but while an inference may be partial and hasty, an induction is careful, and aims to be complete. Compare DEMONSTRATION, INFERENCE.

INDUCTION COIL

INDUCTION COIL An apparatus for generating currents by electromagnetic induction, consisting usually of two concentric coils of insulated wire enclosing an iron core. One of the coils is called the primary and the other the secondary. Ordinarily, the primary is short and of thick wire, and the secondary long and of thin wire. An alternating current of high tension is induced in the secondary coil by rapid automatic making and breaking of the circuit in the primary. Also INDUCTION–COIL.

IN·DUS·TRI·OUS (–us) adj. 1 Assiduously or habitually occupied in any work, business, or pursuit. 2 Indicating diligence. 3 Industrial. —·LY adv. —·NESS noun.

Synonyms: active, assiduous, busy, diligent, employed, engaged, occupied, sedulous. Industrious signifies zealously or habitually applying oneself to any work or business. Busy applies to an activity which may be temporary, industrious to a habit of life. We say a man is busy just now; that is, occupied at the moment with something that takes his full attention. It would be ridiculous or satirical to say, he is industrious just now. But busy can be used in the sense of industrious, as when we say he is a busy man. Diligent indicates also a disposition, which is ordinarily habitual, and suggests more of heartiness and volition than industrious. We say one is a diligent, rather than an industrious, reader of the Bible. Compare ACTIVE, BUSY, INDEFATIGABLE.

IN·DUS·TRY noun [·TRIES pl.] 1 Earnest or constant application to work or business. 2 Useful labor in general. 3 A special branch of productive work, or the capital or workers employed in it; as, the steel industry, the farming industry. 4 The mechanical and manufacturing branches of productive activity, as distinguished from agricultural. 5

[Obs.] Skill; dexterity; also, a clever device or contrivance. [<L. industria <industrius, diligent]

Synonyms: application, assiduity, attention, constancy, diligence, effort, exertion, intentness, labor, pains, patience, perseverance, persistence, sedulousness. Industry is the quality, action, or habit of earnest, steady, and continued attention or devotion to any useful or productive work or task, manual or mental. Assiduity (L. ad, to, and sedeo, sit), as the etymology suggests, sits down to a task until it is done. Diligence (L. diligo, love, choose) invests more effort and exertion, with love of the work or deep interest in its accomplishment; application (L. ad, to, and plico, fold) bends to its work and concentrates all one's powers upon it with utmost intensity; hence, application can hardly be as unremitting as assiduity. Constancy is a steady devotion of heart and principle. Patience works on in spite of annoyances; perseverance overcomes hindrances and difficulties; persistence strives relentlessly against opposition; persistence has very frequently an unfavorable meaning, implying that one persists in spite of considerations that should induce him to desist. Industry is diligence applied to some vocation, business, or profession; hence, by derived use, the occupation itself. Labor and pains refer to the exertions of the worker and the tax upon him, while assiduity, perseverance, etc., refer to his continuance in the work. See BUSINESS. Antonyms: idleness, inattention, inconstancy, indolence, neglect, negligence, remissness, sloth.

IN·FIN′·I·TATE tr. verb [·TAT·ED, ·TAT·ING] In logic, to make an affirmative concept or proposition infinite or indefinite by adding a negative prefix to one of its terms; also, to change a negative statement to an affirmative by adding a negative prefix to one of its terms; as, the negative statement "tigers are not herbivorous" when infinitated becomes "tigers are non-herbivorous." —IN·FIN·I·TA′·TION noun.

IN·FI·NITE (-nĭt) adj. 1 So great as to be immeasurable and unbounded; limitless; as, infinite power or space. 2 All-embracing; perfect; absolute; as, the infinite God. 3 Designating a mathematical quantity conceived as always increasing so as to exceed any other assignable quantity in value. 4 In music, composed so that it can be repeated over and over, without finale. 5 Very numerous; very great; as, to take infinite pains.

—noun That which is infinite; an infinite quantity or magnitude; infinity. —THE INFINITE God; Eternity; the Absolute. [<L. infinitus <in-, not, + finis, limit] —·LY adv. —·NESS noun.

Synonyms: absolute, boundless, countless, eternal, illimitable, immeasurable, innumerable, interminable, limitless, measureless, numberless, unbounded, unconditioned, unfathomable, unlimited, unmeasured. Infinite signifies without bounds or limits in any way, and may be applied to space, time, quantity, or number. Countless, innumerable, and numberless, which should be the same as infinite, are in common usage vaguely employed to denote what it is difficult or practically impossible to count or number, but still perhaps falling far short of infinite; as, countless leaves, the countless sands on the seashore, numberless battles, innumerable delays. So, too, boundless, illimitable, limitless, measureless, and unlimited are loosely used in reference to what has no apparent or readily determinable limits in space or time; as, we speak of the boundless ocean. Infinite space is without bounds, not only in fact, but in thought; infinite time is truly eternal. Compare ETERNAL, PERFECT. Antonyms: bounded, brief, circumscribed, evanescent, finite, limited, little, measurable, moderate, narrow, restricted, shallow, short, small, transient, transitory.

IN·FIN·I·TES′·I·MAL adj. 1 Infinitely small; so small as to be incalculable and insignificant for all practical purposes. 2 Denoting a mathematical quantity conceived as continually diminishing toward zero as a limit. —noun An infinitesimal quantity. —·LY adv.

IN·FIN·I·TI′·VAL adj. Of or pertaining to the infinitive form of the verb in grammar. —·LY adv.

IN·FIN·I·TIVE (-tĭv) adj. 1 Without limitation of person or number: opposed to finite. 2 Using the infinitive mood.

—noun The form of the verb that expresses, without regard to person or number, the action or condition asserted by the verb; as, to love. It is usually classed as a mood. Its sign in English is to, which is omitted after auxiliaries do, will, shall, may, can, must, and used optionally after dare, help, need, please, and go in certain phrases, after rather, lief, but with a negative, and after see, hear, feel, let, make, bid, help, know, find, etc. Also INFINITIVE MOOD. — SPLIT INFINITIVE An expression in which the sign of the infinitive "to" is separated from its verb by an intervening word, usually an adverb, as in the phrase "to quickly return." Although the construction is often condemned, it is sometimes justified to escape ambiguity.

IN·FIN′·I·TUDE (-tūde) noun 1 The quality of being infinite or boundless. 2 An infinite or unlimited quantity.

IN·FIN·I·TY noun [·TIES pl.] 1 The quality or state of being infinite; boundlessness; perfection. 2 Something, as space, regarded as boundless. 3 The portion of space that lies at an infinite distance. 4 An infinite number or quantity: denoted by ∞; also, the point or series of points in space that by supposition lie at an infinite distance from the definite point in question.

IN·HER·ENT (in·hēre′–) adj. 1 Permanently united; intrinsic; innate; essential. 2 Pertaining as a property or attribute. Also IN·HE·REN′·TIAL. —IN·HER·ENT·LY adv.

Synonyms: congenital, essential, innate, inborn, in-bred, indispensable, indwelling, infixed, ingrained, inhering, innate, inseparable, internal, intrinsic, inwrought, native, natural, subjective. Immanent is a philosophic word, to denote that which dwells in or pervades any substance or spirit without necessarily being a part of it. That which is inherent is an inseparable part of that in which it inheres, and is usually thought of with reference to some outworking or effect; as, an inherent difficulty. God is said to be immanent (not inherent) in the universe. Frequently intrinsic and inherent can be interchanged, but inherent applies to qualities, while intrinsic applies to essence, so that to speak of intrinsic excellence conveys higher praise than if we say inherent excellence. Inherent and intrinsic may be said of persons or things; congenital, inborn, inbred, innate, apply to living beings. Congenital is frequent in medical and legal use with special application to defects; as, congenital idiocy. Innate and inborn are almost identical, but innate is preferred in philosophic use, as when we speak of innate ideas; that which is inborn, congenital, or innate may be original with the individual, but that which is inbred is inherited. Ingrained signifies dyed in the grain, and denotes that which is deeply wrought into substance or character. See NATURAL. Antonyms: accidental, casual, external, extrinsic, fortuitous, incidental, outward, subsidiary, superadded, superficial, superfluous, superimposed, supplemental, transient, unconnected.

IN·JU·RI·OUS (-us) adj. 1 Hurtful, deleterious, or detrimental in any way. 2 [Obs.] Disposed to inflict injury; inimical. 3 Slanderous; abusive. See synonyms under BAD, PERNICIOUS. Compare INJURY. —·LY adv. —·NESS noun.

IN·JU·RY noun [·RIES pl.] 1 Any wrong, damage, or mischief done or suffered. 2 A source of harm. 3 A wrong or damage done to another; the unlawful infringement or privation of rights. 4 [Obs.] Abuse; insult.

Synonyms: blemish, damage, detriment, disadvantage, evil, harm, hurt, impairment, injustice, loss, mischief, outrage, prejudice, wrong. Injury is the general term including all the rest. Whatever reduces the value, utility, beauty, or desirableness of anything is an injury to that thing; of persons, whatever is so done as to operate adversely to one in his person, rights, property, or reputation is an injury. Damage (L. damnum, loss) is that which occasions loss to the possessor; hence, damage reduces value, utility, or beauty, detriment (L. deterere, to rub or wear away) is similar in meaning, but far milder. As a rule, the slightest use of an article by a purchaser operates to its detriment if again offered for sale, even when the article may not have received the slightest damage. Dam- age is partial; loss is properly absolute as far as it is predicated at all; the loss of a ship implies that it is gone beyond recovery; the loss of the rudder is a damage to the ship; but since the loss of a part still leaves a part, we may speak of a partial or a total loss. Evil commonly suggests suffering or sin, or both; as, the evils of poverty, the social evil. Harm is closely synonymous with injury; it may apply to body, mind, or estate, but always affects real worth, while injury may concern only estimated value. A hurt is an injury that causes pain, physical or mental; a slight hurt may be no real harm. Mischief is disarrangement, trouble, or harm usually caused by some voluntary agent, with or without injurious intent; a child's thoughtless sport may do great mischief; wrong is harm done with evil intent. An outrage combines insult and injury. Compare synonyms for BLEMISH, INJUSTICE, LOSS, OUTRAGE, VIOLENCE. Antonyms: advantage, amelioration, benefit, blessing, boon, help, improvement, remedy, service, utility.

IN·JUS·TICE (-tis) noun 1 The violation or denial of justice. 2 An unjust act; a wrong.

Synonyms: grievance, inequity, iniquity, injury, unfairness, unrighteousness, wrong. Injustice is a violation or denial of justice, an act or omission that is contrary to equity or justice; as, the injustice of unequal taxes. In legal usage a wrong involves injury to person, property, or reputation, as the result of evil intent; injustice applies to civil damage or loss, not necessarily involving injury to person or property, as by misrepresentation of goods which does not amount to a legal warranty. In popular usage, injustice may involve no direct injury to person, property interest, or character, and no harmful intent, while wrong always involves both, one who attributes another's truly generous act to a selfish motive does him an injustice. Compare synonyms for INJURY, SIN. Antonyms: equity, fairness, faithfulness, honesty, honor, impartiality, integrity, justice, lawfulness, rectitude, right, righteousness, uprightness.

IN·NER·VA'·TION noun 1 The act of innerving or innervating; specifically, in physiology, the act of imparting or directing nervous energy from a central organ to any part of the nervous system, whether central or peripheral. 2 The arrangement of nervous filaments in any part of the body.

IN·NERVE (i·nŭrv') tr. verb [·NERVED, ·NERV·ING] To impart nervous energy to; invigorate; strengthen; animate; stimulate.

IN·NESS, GEORGE, 1825–94, American painter.

IN·NING noun 1 The period during which a party or person is in power, control, or action. 2 In baseball and other games, a turn at the bat; the period during which one side is at the bat, or the period when each side takes one turn at the bat. 3 pl. In cricket, the play of, or score made by, either side while batting or by any one batsman during his turn: construed in the singular. 4 pl. Lands reclaimed from the sea. 5 An ingathering, as of grain into a barn, etc.; also, a reclaiming. [<OE. innung]

INN'·KEEP·ER noun The proprietor or keeper of an inn. Also INN'·HOLD·ER.

IN·NO·CENCE noun 1 The state of being innocent; the condition of being free from evil or guile, or from that which corrupts or vitiates; purity of heart; freedom from taint. 2 Freedom from guilt, as of some specific crime or charge; absence of legal guilt. 3 Freedom from harmful or noxious qualities; harmlessness; innocuousness. 4 Simplicity or ignorance through lack of intellect or imperfect development; hence, weak-mindedness. 5 Freedom from illegal taint, as violation of an embargo or blockade by conveying goods to a belligerent. 6 A bluet; also, a slender-stemmed, erect herb (Collinsia verna) with blue and white corolla.

Synonyms: blamelessness, goodness, guilelessness, guiltlessness, harmlessness, innocuousness, inoffensiveness, purity, simplicity, sincerity, sinlessness, stainlessness, virtue. Innocence, which is goodness without temptation or trial, or perhaps without knowledge of evil, is less than virtue which is goodness that resists and overcomes temptation. Compare synonyms for INNOCENT. Antonyms: contamination, corruption, crime, criminality, evil, fault, guile, guilt, harm, harmfulness, hurt, hurtfulness, impurity, ruin, sin, sinfulness, stain, wrong.

IN·NO·CEN·CY noun [·CIES pl.] Innocence; also, an instance of innocence.

IN·NO·CENT adj. 1 Not tainted with sin; pure; ignorant of evil; blameless; as, an innocent babe; also, holy; sinless. 2 Free from the guilt of a particular evil action or crime. 3 Free from qualities that can harm or injure; innocuous; harmless. 4 Of artless or ingenuous disposition; naive. 5 Not resulting in evil; not maliciously intended; as, an innocent lie, an innocent remark. 6 Free from liability to forfeiture; not contraband; lawful; permitted. 7 Lacking in knowledge or sense; simple or ignorant; imbecile. 8 Lacking in worldly knowledge; as, an innocent girl. 9 Entirely lacking; as, innocent of grammar.

—noun 1 One unstained by sin; a young child. 2 One who is weak-minded. 3 The bluet. —THE INNOCENTS The young children put to death by Herod: commemorated Dec. 28. Matt. ii, 16. [<F. <L. in-, not, + noceo, injure] —IN NO CENT LY adv.

Synonyms (adj.): blameless, clean, clear, faultless, guileless, guiltless, harmless, immaculate, innocuous, innoxious, inoffensive, pure, right, righteous, sinless, spotless, stainless, upright, virtuous. Innocent, in the full sense, signifies not tainted with sin; not having done wrong or violated legal or moral precept or duty; as, an innocent babe. Innocent is a negative word, expressing less than righteous, upright, or virtuous, which imply knowledge of good and evil, with free choice of the good. A little child or a lamb is innocent; a tried and faithful man is righteous, upright, virtuous. Immaculate, pure, and sinless may be used either of one who has never known the possibility of evil or of one who has perfectly and triumphantly resisted it. Innocent, in a specific case, signifies free from the guilt of a particular act, even when the total character may be very evil, as, the thief was found to be innocent of the murder. See CANDID, PURE. Antonyms: compare synonyms for CRIMINAL.

IN·QUI·LINE (–lin or –līne) adj. Living in the abode of another, as an insect in a gall made by another: also IN QUIL·I·NOUS. — noun An animal that lives in the abode of another; a commensal. [<L. inquilinus, lodger]

IN QUI·NA′·TION noun 1 The state of being defiled, corruption. 2 Pollution; infection. [<L. inquino, pollute] — IN′·QUI·NATE tr. verb.

IN·QUIRE verb [IN·QUIRED, IN·QUIR·ING] 1 To ask or ask about; question or ask a question; seek information by asking questions. 2 To make investigation; examine. Also spelled enquire. [<L. inquiro <in, into, + quaro, seek] — IN·QUIR·A·BLE adj. — IN·QUIR·ER noun — IN·QUIR·ING adj. — IN·QUIR·ING·LY adv.

Synonyms: ask, examine, interrogate, query, question. One may either ask or inquire one's way. In this sense ask and inquire are nearly interchangeable, chiefly differing in the fact that ask is the popular and inquire the more formal word, although ask has place in the best literary use. Also, ask has more reference to the presence of a second person; the solitary investigator inquires rather than asks the cause of some phenomenon: in this sense ask is often used reflexively; as, "I asked myself why this happened." Inquire into thus becomes a natural synonym for examine, investigate, etc. Compare ASK, EXAMINE, QUESTION.

IN·QUIR·Y (in·kwī′·rī or in′ kwī·ri) noun [IES pl.] 1 The act of inquiring. 2 Investigation; research; search for knowledge. 3 A query.

Synonyms: examination, interrogation, investigation, query, question, research, scrutiny, study. See QUESTION. Antonyms: see synonyms for ANSWER.

IN·QUI·SI′·TION·AL adj. 1 Of or pertaining to the Inquisition; characterized by searching investigation, or by severities like those of the Inquisition. — ·LY adv.

IN QUI·SI′·TION·IST noun One who practices the methods of the Inquisition; an inquisitor.

IN QUIS·I·TIVE (–kwiz′·i·tiv) adj. 1 Given to questioning, especially for the gratification of curiosity; prying; as, an inquisitive busybody. 2 Inclined to the pursuit of knowledge. — ·LY adv. — ·NESS noun.

Synonyms: curious, inquiring, intrusive, meddlesome, meddling, peeping, prying, scrutinizing, searching. An inquisitive person is one who is bent on finding out all that can be found out by inquiry, especially of little and personal matters, and hence is generally meddlesome and prying. Inquisitive may be used in a good sense, but in such connection inquiring is to be preferred; as, an inquiring mind. As applied to a state of mind, curious denotes a keen and rather pleasurable desire to know fully something to which one's attention has been called, but without the active tendency that inquisitive implies; a well-bred person may be curious to know, but will not be inquisitive in trying to ascertain what is of interest in the affairs of another. Antonyms: apathetic, careless, heedless, inattentive, indifferent, unconcerned, uninterested.

IN·QUIS·I·TOR (–kwiz′·i·tur) noun One who makes inquiry or investigation; specifically, an officer of the law whose duty it is to investigate, as a sheriff or coroner.

IN QUIS·I·TO′·RI·AL (in·kwiz–) adj. 1 After the manner of an inquisitor; disposed to ask cruel and offensive questions. 2 Pertaining to a court of inquisition or to an inquisitor or his duties. 3 [Law] Pertaining to a system of criminal procedure in which the proceedings are conducted secretly and the judge acts also as prosecutor. Compare ACCUSATORY. ACCUSATORIAL. — ·LY adv. — ·NESS noun.

IN RE [IN RE BUS pl.] In the case or matter of, concerning: a legal phrase; as, in re Smith vs. Jones.

IN REM SU·AM [L.] In his own case: said of a certain power of attorney.

IN·RO noun A set or nest of small lacquered boxes worn at the girdle by Japanese, designed to contain small articles of convenience, as medicines, a seal, and sealing wax. [<Jap. <in, seal, + ro, wax]

IN·ROAD noun 1 A hostile entrance into a country; raid, inv forcible encroachment. 2 Any illegal, destructive, or wasteful encroachment; as, inroads upon one's health, time, savings, etc. See synonyms under INVASION.

IN·RUSH noun A sudden rushing in; invasion.

IN·SAL′·I·VATE tr. verb [·VAT·ED, ·VAT·ING] To mix with saliva, as food, in eating. — IN·SAL·I·VA′·TION noun

IN·SA·LU′·BRI·OUS (–us) adj. Not wholesome; not healthful. — ·BRI·OUS·LY adv. — BRI·TY noun.

INS AND OUTS Minute details; particulars.

IN·SANE adj. 1 Not sane, mentally deranged or unsound, crazy; irrational. 2 Set apart for or used by the insane. 3 Characteristic of those who are mentally deranged; insensate. 4 Foolish, extravagant, or impractical; as, insane hopes. [<L. in–, not, + sanus, sound] — ·LY adv. — NESS noun

Synonyms: absurd, cracked, crazed, crazy, delirious, demented, deranged, distracted, frantic, frenzied, irrational, lunatic, mad, maniac, maniacal, monomaniac, wandering, wild. Antonyms: clear, collected, level-headed, sage, sane, sensible, sober, sound, wise.

IN·SAN·I·TY noun 1 Any mental disorder caused by disease, characterized by temporary or permanent irrational or violent deviations from normal thinking, feeling, and be-valid contract, or marriage sound sense; extreme folly.

Synonyms: alienation, craziness, delirium, dementia, derangement, frenzy, lunacy, madness, mania, monomania. Of these terms insanity is the most comprehensive, including in a loose sense all morbid conditions of mind due

S. Supreme Court, etc. 6 Administration of law; the forms and processes by which it is made effective. 7 Right of authority; also, formerly, jurisdiction. 8 In theology, one of God's attributes, by virtue of which he wills equal laws and makes just awards. 9 [Obs.] Exactness or precision; justness. — BED OF JUSTICE The seat occupied by the French King when attending the deliberations of the parliament; also, the session itself. — DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE A department of the U.S. government under the direction of the Attorney General: it supervises enforcement of federal laws, directs the activities of U. S. judicial districts, and represents the government in legal matters generally. Also JUSTICE DEPARTMENT. [<F. <L. justitia <justus, just]

Synonyms: equity, fairness, faithfulness, honor, impartiality, integrity, justness, law, lawfulness, legality, propriety, rectitude, right, righteousness, rightfulness, truth, uprightness, virtue. In its governmental relations, justice is the giving to every person exactly what he deserves, not necessarily involving any consideration of what any other may deserve; equity (the quality of being equal) is giving every one as much advantage, privilege, or consideration as is given to any other; it is that which is equally right or just to all concerned; equity is a close synonym for fairness and impartiality, but it has a legal precision that those words have not. In legal proceedings, the system of equity, devised to supply the insufficiencies of law, deals with cases to which the law by reason of its universality cannot apply. Integrity, rectitude, right, righteousness, and virtue denote conformity of personal conduct to the moral law, and thus necessarily include justice, which is giving others that which is their due. Lawfulness is an ambiguous word, meaning in its narrower sense mere legality, which may be far from justice, but in its higher sense signifying accordance with the supreme law or right, and thus including perfect justice. Justness refers rather to logical relations than to practical matters; as, we speak of the justness of a statement or of a criticism. See JUDGE, VIRTUE. Antonyms: dishonesty, inequity, injustice, partiality, unfairness, unlawfulness, unreasonableness, untruth, wrong.

Synonyms: acquaintance, apprehension, cognition, cognizance, comprehension, erudition, experience, information, intelligence, intuition, learning, light, lore, perception, recognition, scholarship, science, wisdom. Knowledge is all that the mind knows, from whatever source derived or obtained, or by whatever process; the aggregate facts, truths, or principles acquired or retained by the mind, including alike the intuitions native to the mind and all that has been learned respecting phenomena, causes, laws, principles, literature, etc. We say of a studious man that he has a great store of knowledge, or of an intelligent man of the world, that he has a fund of varied information. We speak of perception of external objects, apprehension of intellectual truth. Simple perception gives a limited knowledge of external objects, merely as such; the cognition of the same objects is a knowledge of them in some relation; cognizance is the formal or official recognition of something as an object of knowledge; we take cognizance of it. Intuition is primary knowledge antecedent to all teaching or reasoning; experience is knowledge that has entered directly into one's own life; as, a child's experience that fire will burn. See ACQUAINTANCE, EDUCATION, LEARNING, SCIENCE, WISDOM. Antonyms: ignorance, illiteracy, inexperience, misapprehension, misconception, misunderstanding, rudeness, unfamiliarity.

Synonyms (noun): canon, code, command, commandment, decree, edict, enactment, formula, mandate, order, ordinance, principle, regulation, rule, statute. Law in its ideal is the statement of a principle of right in mandatory form, by competent authority, with adequate penalty for disobedience; in common use the term is applied to any legislative act, however imperfect or unjust. Command and commandment are personal and particular; as, the commands of a parent; the Ten Commandments. An edict is the act of an absolute sovereign or other authority; we speak of the edict of an emperor, the decree of a court. A mandate is specific for an occasion or a purpose; a superior court issues its mandate to an inferior court to send up its records (see MANDATE). Statute is the recognized legal term for a specific law; enactment is the more vague and general expression. We speak of algebraic or chemical formulas, municipal ordinances, military orders, army regulations, ecclesiastical canons, the rules of a business house. Law is often used, also, for a recognized principle, whose violation is attended with injury or loss that acts like a penalty; as, the laws of business; the laws of nature. In more strictly scientific use, a natural law is simply a recognized system of sequences or relations; as Kepler's laws of planetary distances. See JUSTICE, LEGISLATION.

LIFE-TIMER noun One serving a life sentence; a lifer.

LIFE TOKEN In widespread European and Asiatic folklore, an object either chosen by or born with a person, which manifests in some way the fact that he is in danger, may die, or is dead. The object is sometimes a knife left behind, which rusts or sweats blood when harm befalls the absent hero, an apple which changes to indicate danger or rots to indicate death, a shirt that turns black, a brilliant ring or jewel that grows dull; in European folklore, commonly a tree that withers or dies. The life of the hero is almost invariably co-existent with the life token. The classical story of Meleager and the burning brand is typical of this idea, as is the Kashmir story of Panj Phul who was never without her necklace because it was a charm against sickness and danger and contained the core of her life. The life-token idea is strong also among primitive peoples in Africa, Australia, Melanesia, Tasmania, and among North American Indians. Compare BIRTH TREE.

LOG'·A·RITHM (-rith*m*) noun 1 The exponent of the power to which a fixed number, called the base, must be raised in order to produce a given number. For example, in decimal logarithms the base is 10, and the logarithm of 100 is 2 because 10 raised to the second power is 100; the logarithm of 1000 is 3 because 10 raised to the third power is 1000, and so on. 2 In a former and broader sense, one of any series of numbers whose members correspond, each to each, with the natural numbers, but are in arithmetical progression when the latter are in geometrical, so that, if the products of two sets of numbers are equal, the sums of the corresponding logarithms are also equal. [<Gr. logos <legō, select, + arithmos, number] — LOG·A·RITH'·MIC or ·MI·CAL adj. — LOG·A·RITH'·MIC·AL·LY adv.

Logarithms in the modern sense of def. 1 have also the property described in def. 2, but are limited by the requirement that, whatever the base may be, the logarithm of 1 must be 0, so that processes of addition and subtraction of the logarithms correspond to multiplication and division of natural numbers. The ARITHMETICAL COMPLEMENT OF A LOGARITHM is the difference between the logarithm and 10, which is the base in the DECIMAL or BRIGGSIAN LOGARITHM. See also ANTILOGARITHM. Tables of logarithms are much used to abridge computation. Thus, when two large numbers are to be multiplied, their logarithms are found in the table and added. The sum is the logarithm of the product sought.

ma·gen·ta (–jĕn'·tuh) noun 1 A somewhat glaring red coal-tar dyestuff derived from aniline: also called aniline red and fuchsin. 2 The color given by the pigment, a strong purplish-rose or purplish-red. [<Magenta, a town west of Milan, Italy]

Mag·gio·re (mahd·jō'·reh), Lago A lake in northern Italy and Switzerland; 40 by 2 miles.

mag·got (măg'·ut) noun 1 The larva of a fly; a footless insect larva; a grub. 2 A whim; fancy. [Etymology obscure] mag·got·y adj. Infested with maggots; fly-blown; whimsical. — mag·got·i·ness noun.

Ma·gi (may'·ji) noun pl. [Ma·gus sing.] The priestly caste of the Medes and Persians; specifically, the "wise men" of Matt. ii, 1. [<L.] — Ma·gi·an adj. & noun.

Ma gi·an·ism (may'·jĭ–) noun The creed and cult of the Magi.

mag ic (măj'–) noun 1 Any supernatural art; sorcery; necromancy. 2 Sleight of hand. 3 Any agency that works with wonderful effect. See synonyms under SORCERY. — BLACK MAGIC Any of the branches of magic which invoke the aid of demons or spirits, as witchcraft or diabolism. — LIKE MAGIC As if by magic; instantly.

— adj. 1 Of the nature of magic; used in magic; possessing supernatural powers; sorcerous. 2 Acting like magic. [<Gr. magikos, magical, <magos, wizard] mag i cal (măj'–) adj. Pertaining to or produced by or as by magic. The adjective magic is applied more commonly to the powers, influences, or practices, while magical is more frequently used of the effects of magic; we speak of magic arts, a magic wand, but of magical effect, a magical result. — ·ly adv.

MAGICAL OBJECT Any inanimate object possessing the power to benefit or harm the possessor or others, to speak, etc.: originally believed to be the habitation of a controlling spirit and therefore to be worshiped (see FETISH). In later folklore and fairytale, the spirit could be summoned by its means (see ALADDIN); in later belief, the object possessed its own powers (see AMULET, CHARM, DIVINING ROD, MASCOT).

ma gi cian (–jish'·un) noun An expert in magic arts; sorcerer; wizard.

ma gilp noun A mixture used as a vehicle for oil-colors, usually composed of a pale drying oil and a turpentine varnish, such as mastic: also spelled megilp. Also ma·gilph (–gilf').

Ma gi·not line (mă'·jĭ·nō) A system of French fortifications along the German frontier, built during 1925–1935. [< André Maginot, 1877–1932, French statesman] mag is·te' ri·al (măj–) adj. 1 Of or pertaining to a magistrate or magistracy; like or befitting a master; commanding; authoritative. 2 Hence, having an air of authority; dictatorial; oracular; pompous. 3 Pertaining to a chemist's or alchemist's magistery. See synonyms under DOGMATIC. [<L. magister, master] — ·ly adv. — ·ness noun.

mag is te'·ri um (măj–) noun The authority vested in the Roman Catholic Church to teach dogmatically. [<L.]

mag' is·ter y (măj'–) noun [·ies pl.] 1 An authoritative statement or exposition; a magisterial decree. 2 A fundamental master principle of nature; in alchemy, the power to transmute metals or the product of transmutation; also, a panacea. 3 A compound, as a precipitate, formed when two liquids are mixed, and differing in character from either: a term used by the older chemists and preserved in the phrase magistery of bismuth. [See MAGISTRIAL.]

mag·is tra·cy (măj'·is·truh·sĭ) noun [·cies pl.] 1 The office or dignity of a magistrate. 2 The district under a magistrate's jurisdiction. 3 Magistrates collectively.

mag is·tral (măj'–) adj. 1 Like a magistrate; imperious or pedagogical; magisterial. 2 In pharmacy, specially compounded or prescribed; not kept in stock. 3 Having sovereign power as a medicine. 4 Chief; main; as, the magistral line. — noun The line from which the positions of the various members of a fortification are determined: also MAGISTRAL LINE.

mag' is trate (măj'–) noun 1 One clothed with public civil authority; an executive or judicial officer. 2 Usually, when unqualified, a minor local justice. [<L. magister, master] mag is·tra·ture (–chŏŏr) noun 1 Magistracy; government. 2 The term of a magistrate's office. 3 Magistrates collectively.

Ma gle·mo'·si·an (mah·gluh·mō'·zĭ·un) adj. Of or relating to the special phases or aspects of the Mesolithic forest culture of northern Europe as indicated by discoveries at Maglemose, Denmark.

mag·ma noun [·ma·ta pl.] 1 Any soft, doughy mixture of organic and mineral materials. 2 In geology, the molten mass from which igneous rocks are formed; also, less correctly, the glassy base of an igneous rock. 3 The residuum obtained after expressing the juice from fruits. [<Gr. <massō, knead] — mag·mat·ic adj.

Mag·na Car·ta 1 The Great Charter of English liberties, delivered June 19, 1215, by King John, at Runnymede, on the demand of the English barons; first document of the English constitution. 2 Any fundamental constitution that secures personal liberty and civil rights. Also Mag·na Char·ta, the erroneous but common form. [<L.]

mag·na est ve ri tas, et præ va·let (pree–) [L.] Great is truth, and it prevails.

mag' na flux adj. Designating a method for the detection of defects in metals and in engine parts by noting the arrangement of the particles of a magnetic powder scattered over the magnetized surface.

Magna Græcia Same as GRÆCIA MAGNA.

mag na·nim'·i ty noun [·ties pl.] 1 The quality of being magnanimous; greatness of soul; generosity in sentiment or conduct toward others; exaltation above mean or petty motives. 2 A magnanimous deed.

mag nan i·mous (–nus) adj. 1 Elevated in soul; scorning what is mean or base. 2 Dictated by magnanimity; unselfish; as, magnanimous candor. See synonyms under GENEROUS. [<L. magnus, great, + animus, soul] — ly adv. — ·ness noun.

mag nate noun A person of rank or importance; a noble or grandee, one notable or powerful in any sphere; as, an industrial magnate. [<LL. magnas <L. magnus, great] mag ne si a (–nee'·zī·uh or –nee'·zhuh) noun Magnesium oxide, a light, white, earthy powder, used in medicine as an antacid laxative, in glassmaking, etc. It can be made by burning magnesium or by igniting certain of the magnesium salts. — MILK OF MAGNESIA A milk white aqueous suspension of magnesium hydroxide, $Mg(OH)_2$: used as a laxative and antacid. [<Gr. Magnēsia, a district in Thessaly] — mag·ne sian (–zhun), mag ne sic adj.

Mag ne si a 1 An ancient town of Lydia, Asia Minor; scene of the defeat of Antiochus the Great by the two Scipios, 190 B.C. See MANISSA. 2 An ancient city of Ionia. 3 A coast district of eastern Thessaly, part of which now forms a nome of Greece.

MAGNESIA ALBA A light, white, hydrous magnesium carbonate.

mag' ne site noun A massive, granular carbonate of magnesium, $MgCO_3$.

mag ne si um (–nee'·zī·um or –zhī·um) noun A light, malleable, ductile, silver-white, metallic element (symbol Mg) in the second group of the periodic table, used to produce a brilliant light by its combustion, and also as an alloy metal. It occurs abundantly in combination, as in magnesite and dolomite. See ILMENI.

MAGNESIUM LIGHT A brilliant and intense light obtained by the combustion of magnesium: used in signaling, photography, pyrotechnics, etc.

mag·net noun 1 A lodestone. 2 Any mass of iron, steel, or material capable of attracting other like masses. Magnets are either NATURAL MAGNETS when, like lodestones, they are found already magnetized, or ARTIFICIAL MAGNETS, when magnetism has been given to them by placing them in the field of another magnet or in that caused by an electric current. See ELECTROMAGNET. 3 Figuratively, a person or thing exercising a strong attraction. [<Gr. magnes <Magnēsia, a district in Thessaly] mag net ic adj. 1 Pertaining to a magnet or magnetism; able to attract or be attracted by a lodestone; capable of exerting or responding to magnetic force. 2 Pertaining to terrestrial magnetism. 3 Possessing personal attractiveness or magnetism. 4 Pertaining to mesmerism. 5 Employing electrical treatments; as, a magnetic physician. Also mag·net i·cal.

— noun A substance that has or may be given a magnetic field, as iron, steel, nickel, cobalt. — mag·net·i·cal ly adv.

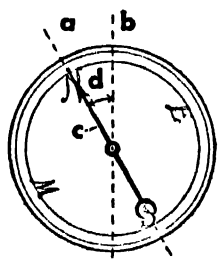
MAGNETIC CHART A chart indicating the variations in the earth's magnetic field for a given area.

MAGNETIC DIP The angle which a dipping needle or the lines of magnetic force at any place make with the horizon.

MAGNETIC EQUATOR An irregular, unstable line on the earth's surface, encircling it nearly midway between the magnetic poles, where a free magnetic needle has no tendency to dip; the aclinic line. It coincides nearly with the geographical or terrestrial equator. See ACLINIC.

MAGNETIC FIELD That region in the neighborhood of a magnet or current-carrying body in which the magnetic or electrical forces are observable.



MAGNETIC FLUX The number of magnetic lines of force passing through a magnetic circuit.

MAGNETIC HYSTERESIS That property of a magnetic material by virtue of which the magnetic induction from a given force depends upon the previous conditions of magnetization.

MAGNETIC LATITUDE Latitude as measured from the magnetic equator.

MAGNETIC MINE An under-water mine containing a powerful and sensitive permanent magnet which, in the presence of any large mass of magnetic material, as a ship, actuates an electrical circuit and detonates the mine.

MAGNETIC NEEDLE A freely movable, magnetized, needle-shaped piece of steel, the two ends of which tend to point to the north and south (magnetic) poles of the earth.

MAGNETIC NEEDLE
a Magnetic north.
b True north
c Magnetic needle.
d Angle of variation

MAGNETIC NORTH That spot on the earth's surface towards which one end of the magnetic needle tends to point.

MAGNETIC POLE Either of the poles of a magnet; more specifically, those points on the earth's surface where the lines of magnetic force are vertical, called the NORTH and SOUTH MAGNETIC POLES. These slowly change position and do not coincide with the geographical poles.

MAGNETIC PYRITES Same as PYRRHOTITE.

MAG·NET·ICS noun The science of magnetism.

MAGNETIC STORM A sudden disturbance of the magnetic field surrounding the earth, occurring simultaneously over the whole earth and apparently connected with sunspots.

MAG′·NET·ISM (–iz'm) noun 1 That quality or agency to which magnetic force is due. 2 The science that treats of the laws and conditions of magnetic force: also MAG·NET·ICS. 3 The sympathetic personal quality that attracts or interests. 4 Mesmerism. Compare ANIMAL MAGNETISM.

MAG′·NET·ITE noun A massive, granular, isometric, black iron oxide, Fe_3O_4; lodestone; an important ore of iron. [<MAGNET] — MAG·NET·IT′·IC adj.

MAG′·NET·IZE tr. verb [·IZED, ·IZ·ING] 1 To give or communicate magnetic properties to. 2 To attract by sympathetic personal influence. 3 To hypnotize. Also [Br.] MAG′·NET·ISE. — MAG·NET·IZ·A·BIL′·I·TY noun — MAG′·NET·IZ·A·BLE adj. — MAG·NET·I·ZA′·TION noun — MAG′·NET·IZ·ER noun.

MAG·NE·TO (măg·nee′·tō) noun [·TOS pl.] Any magneto-electric machine in which the rotation of a coil of wire between the poles of a permanent magnet induces a current of electricity in the coil; especially, a type of alternator, widely used as a means of igniting the explosive mixtures used in internal-combustion engines, as in automobiles. Also MAGNETO-DYNAMO, MAGNETO-GENERATOR.

MAGNETO- A combining form meaning magnetic force, magnetism, as in *magneto*machine.

MAG·NE·TO·CHEM′·IS·TRY noun The science which treats of the interrelations between magnetic and chemical phenomena. — MAG·NE·TO·CHEM′·I·CAL adj.

MAGNETO-ELECTRICITY noun 1 Electricity generated by the inductive action of a magnet. 2 The science that treats of its principles and phenomena. — MAGNETO-ELECTRIC, MAGNETO-ELECTRICAL adj.

MAG·NE′·TO·GRAPH noun A recording magnetometer.

MAG·NE·TOM′·E·TER noun An instrument for measuring the intensity and direction of magnetic forces. — MAG·NE·TOM′·E·TRY noun.

MAG·NE·TO·MO′·TIVE (măg·nee·tō– or măg·nĭ·tō–) adj. Acting magnetically; characterizing a force producing magnetic flux: dstinguished from electromotive.

MAGNETO-OPTICS noun The study of the behavior of light waves in a magnetic field. — MAGNETO-OPTIC, MAGNETO-OPTICAL adj.

MAG·NE′·TO·SCOPE noun An instrument designed to indicate the presence of magnetic force lines without measuring them.

MAG′·NE·TRON noun A vacuum tube in which the flow of electrons is subject to the control of an external magnetic field. [<MAGNET + (ELEC)TRON]

MAGNI- A combining form from Latin magnus, great, used to mean great, large, as in *magni*rostrate, large-beaked.

MAG·NIF·IC adj. 1 Illustrious; magnificent; sumptuous. 2 Strikingly vast or dignified; imposing. 3 Of language, exalted; sublime; also, pompous; grandiloquent. Also MAG·NIF′·I·CAL. [<F. magnifique <L. magnificus] — MAG·NIF′·I·CAL·LY adv.

MAG·NIF′·I·CAT noun The hymn or canticle of the Virgin Mary, taken from Luke i, 46–55. [<L.]

MAG·NI·FI·CA′·TION noun 1 The act, process, or degree of magnifying, or the state of being magnified; also, magnifying power. 2 The act of extolling or glorifying.

MAG·NIF·I·CENCE noun 1 The state or quality of being magnificent; the exhibition of greatness of action, character, intellect, wealth, or power; brilliant or imposing appearance; display of splendor. 2 A title of courtesy in medieval Rome.

MAG·NIF·I·CENT adj. 1 Grand or majestic in appearance, quality, character, or action; extremely fine or good; befitting the great, as in deeds, manners, or surroundings; great in effect, promise, or import; as, a magnificent prospect, pearl, plan, etc.; also, exalted; imposing; as, magnificent language. 2 Exhibiting magnificence; characterized by splendor: sometimes used as a title; as, Solyman the Magnificent. See synonyms under GRAND, IMPERIAL, SUBLIME. [<L. magnus, great, + facio, make] — ·LY adv.

MAG·NIF′·I·CO noun [·COES pl.] 1 A noble of the Venetian republic: an old title. 2 A lordly personage; one who affects state or splendor. [< It.]

MAG′·NI·FY verb [·FIED, ·FY·ING] 1 To increase the apparent size of, as by a microscope; hence, to enlarge; exaggerate. 2 To exalt; extol; glorify. 3 To cause (an object or objects) to seem greater or more important in any way. 4 To increase the magnitude of. See synonyms under AGGRAVATE, INCREASE, PRAISE. [< L. magnifico <magnus, great] — MAG′·NI·FI·A·BLE adj. — MAG′·NI·FI·ER noun.

MAG·NIL·O·QUENT adj. Of bombastic, pompous style; vainglorious. [<L. magnus, great, + loquens, speaking] — MAG·NIL·O·QUENCE noun — MAG·NIL·O·QUENT·LY adv.

MAG·NI·TO·GORSK′ (mahg·nĭ–) An industrial city on the Ural River in the southern Ural Mountains on the border between Asiatic and European U.S.S.R.

MAG′·NI·TUDE (–tūde) noun 1 Great size or extent; grandeur; importance. 2 That which is conceived of as measurable. 3 The property of having size or extent. 4 A measure of the relative brightness of a star, ranging from one for the brightest to six for those just visible to the naked eye. The standard of reference is the polestar, with a magnitude of 2.512 times as bright as the one next below it; magnitudes greater than 1 on this scale are expressed as minus quantities. 5 Largeness in respect to relation or effect. [< L. magnitudo <magnus, large]

Synonyms: bigness, bulk, dimension, extent, greatness, hugeness, immensity, largeness, size, vastness. Antonyms: diminutiveness, littleness, pettiness, slightness, smallness.

MAG·NO·LI·A (–nō′·lī·uh or –nōl′·yuh) noun Any of a genus (Magnolia) of trees or shrubs with large, fragrant, and often showy flowers; also, the blossom of the evergreen magnolia (M. grandiflora), the State flower of Louisiana and of Mississippi. [<Pierre Magnol, 1638–1715, French botanist]

MAG·NO·LI·A′·CEOUS (–āy′·shus) adj. Of or pertaining to a family (Magnoliaceæ) of polypetalous trees or shrubs, the magnolia family, often aromatic, with alternate, undivided, feather-veined leaves, and large, solitary, axillary or terminal flowers with calyx and corolla colored alike, in three or more rows of three each.

MAGNOLIA WARBLER The black-and-yellow warbler (Dendroica magnolia) of North America.

MAG·NUM noun A wine-bottle of twice the ordinary size; also, the quantity such a bottle will hold: usually 2 quarts. [<L. magnus, great]

MAGNUM OPUS [L.] Literally, great work; hence, the chief work of an artist; a masterpiece.

MAG·NUS HITCH A knot for fastening a rope to a spar, made by a turn about the spar and a half hitch.

MA·GOG (mā′–) See GOG AND MAGOG.

MA·GOT (mah·gō′) noun The Barbary ape [<F.]

MAG·OT TY-BAY BEAN (măg′·uh·tī) A leguminous vine (Chamæcrista fasciculata), common on eastern American shores. [<Magothy River, Md., or perhaps Magotha, Va.]

MAG·PIE (măg′·pi) noun 1 A corvoid bird of Pica or a related genus, having a very long and graduated tail. The common EUROPEAN MAGPIE (P. pica or caudata) has iridescent black plumage with white scapulars, belly, sides, flanks, and inner web of flight feathers: often tamed and taught to say a few words, and noted for its thievishness. The AMERICAN MAGPIE (P. hudsonia) is a variety of the European magpie. P. nuttali is the YELLOW-BILLED MAGPIE of California. 2 An Australian crow shrike resembling a magpie. 3 A chatterbox; a garrulous gossip. [<Mag, diminutive of MARGARET, + PIE]

MAG·UEY (măg′·wāy; Sp. mah·geh′·ī) noun 1 Any of various Mexican agave plants with fleshy leaves and edible cabbage-like heads, especially the century plant (Agave americana) and the pulque agave (A. atrovirens). 2 A fiber plant (genus Furcræa) related to the agave. [<Sp. <Nahuatl]

MA·GUS (mā′–) Singular of MAGI.
